These pictures provide a clue to this week’s article. What right is being shown in these pictures? Can you guess how they are linked together? Write down your thoughts or discuss with someone in your home.
 Governments must actively work to make sure children and adults know about the Convention.
What is needed for every adult and child to know about children’s rights?

Write your thoughts down and then compare your answers with the next slide.
The Government and politicians should talk about rights and help people to understand them.

It should feel ‘normal’ for people to know that children have rights.

All schools should teach about rights.

People who work with children such as teachers, youth workers, police and social workers should be trained about children’s rights.

Newspapers and other information sources report frequently, accurately and positively about rights.

Every young person and child should know who to go to if they feel their rights are not being met.

There are lots of rights so people will need reminding about them, perhaps in the news or with adverts.

Parents and carers should be helped to know about the rights their children have.

People should be able to talk about respecting each others’ rights.

What else did you think of?
Imagine that you didn’t know any rights and that all children everywhere have rights. How would you feel about that? Can you think of any problems children might face? Write a poem or story called “Child with no Rights”.

Article 42 says that all adults should know about rights. Can you explain why this matters?

Do you know your ‘birthday right?’ This is a fun idea thought up by schools in the North East of England – look up, and remember if you can, the article with the same number as the day of the month you were born. Try to get all your family and friends to know their ‘Birthday Right’. Here are all the rights on one page.

Article 42 says that governments have to actively make sure everyone knows about the CRC, and that governments must be active about getting the message about children’s rights out to people. If you were the minister responsible for this what would you do? Have a go at your favourite or most creative idea.

You don’t need to do every single activity but if you have time you can do more than one.
If you were a teacher of very young children, how would you help them to understand about their rights. This video made by Unicef Australia might help to get you started.

Make yourself a set of cards to represent the articles of the CRC than make up some games to play with the people in your home to help everyone learn about rights. There are ideas for games and a template for the cards here.

Lots of organisations, as well as Unicef, help to promote children’s rights. This video is from the Equality and Human Rights Commission. Watch it and make a note of any facts that you did not know before. Share what you have learnt with your teacher or your family.

Have a look and a listen to some of the songs and videos made by schools to help children learn about rights. Which one do you like best? Share this with your family and safely on-line with your friends.
Try to find somewhere peaceful and spend a few minutes being quiet and still. Then think about these questions:

- Why do your rights matter to you? What’s so special about them?
- Imagine a world where every child enjoyed all their rights all the time?
- When you are an adult what will you do to tell other people about rights?
The Government and adults responsible for children and young people are duty bearers. It’s their job to make sure all the rights happen for every child.

Sometimes this can be difficult and tough decisions need to be made. Try to think of some situations that are challenging for duty bearers. Clue: Think about times where one right might seem more important than others.
