Pumpkins

From pumpkin soup to pumpkin pie, there are many tasty recipes for this king of the vegetable patch. Stir meltingly sweet cubes of fried pumpkin into risottos or curries, offsetting the sweetness with fragrant herbs such as sage or thyme, or warming spices such as ginger.

Here is one of our favourite pumpkin recipes – a bowl of this spectacularly delicious soup feels like a cuddle from your granny. You can buy and prepare the pumpkin yourself but if you are short of time then you can also buy pumpkin in a tin – this tends to make the dish smooth and delicious, not to mention convenient. We love the soup made either way, so it’s your choice.

Preparation and cooking times
- Prep 20 mins
- Cook 25 mins

Ingredients (Serves 6)
- 2 tablespoons (tbsp) olive oil
- 2 finely chopped onions
- 1kg peeled, deseeded and chopped pumpkin
- 700ml vegetable stock
- 142ml pot of double cream
- a touch of chilli powder

Method
1. Heat the 2 tbsp of oil in a large saucepan, then gently cook the two finely chopped onions for 5 mins, until soft but not coloured.
2. Add the kilo of peeled, deseeded and chopped pumpkin to the pan, then carry on cooking for 8 - 10 mins, stirring occasionally until it starts to soften and turn golden.
3. Pour all 700ml of vegetable stock into the pan, then season with salt and pepper.
4. Bring to the boil, then simmer for 10 mins until the pumpkin is very soft.
5. Pour the pot of double cream into the pan, bring back to the boil, then purée with a hand blender. For an extra velvety consistency, you can now push the soup through a fine sieve into another pan.

Caution: cutting and peeling a pumpkin is hard work and requires a sharp knife. It’s not a job for clumsy people.
1. Put ticks to show which statements are true and which are false.

The Lookout

This is an extract from a story which takes place during World War Two. Stalker is watching for planes from a hide-out on the top of a cliff. He's alone – but not for long.

Stalker rested his binoculars and rubbed his neck where the strap cut into it. He was round-shouldered and the weight of the binoculars didn't help. He hated the long thinness of his body, the bandy legs and sunken chest that were the mark of rickets. The body that had kept him out of the army. The recruiting sergeant had said he was good for nothing.

So, it seemed a miracle when Jones from the Bird-Watching Club had rung him up. They needed people to watch for enemy planes from clifftop observation posts.

Unable to believe his good luck, he blurted out, 'Do you really want me?'

'Nothing wrong with your eyes, Stalker.'

So he'd gone, looking forward to company and talk.

* * *

No company. When he'd reached the little hut, it was empty. It had been empty a long time. The notices on the notice-board were bleached into invisibility. The floor was covered with last season's dead leaves. The phone had cobwebs.

He was sipping tea when he saw the cat limping up towards him. His first thought was that black cats were lucky. But through his binoculars she didn't look very lucky. She looked thin, beaten, furtive and her fur was staring.

He had no feelings about cats, one way or another. But she was an event in the monotony. Company. When she paused, ten yards from the post, he took a beef sandwich from his pocket and sallied out to meet her. She fled, though he called to her as softly, as gently as he could. He thought bitterly that he couldn't even give a starving cat a beef sandwich properly. He tore up the sandwich and dropped the pieces on the grass and went back inside, watching her from the bird-watcher's hide. He watched with sad satisfaction as she sniffed the sandwich; then turned his attention back to the sea.

Next thing he knew, she was up on the sandbags beside him, purring wildly, rubbing herself in ecstasy against the hand that held the binoculars. He laughed at his sudden success; his popularity. He gave her another sandwich. That, too, vanished instantly.

He felt elated at doing a fellow-creature good. In all this terrifying world, here was someone to whom he could make a difference.

The Lookout

This is another version from another angle. Imagine that the Stalker is in the lookout tower, looking for planes from the sea. He is using a binoculars, but he can't see anything.

Stalker went out to meet the cat. He wanted to talk to her and listen to her stories. The cat approached and sniffed the sandwich he had left. Suddenly, Stalker realized that he was not alone. The cat was a friend, and he decided to share his food. They sat together, talking and enjoying each other's company.

Next thing he knew, the cat was gone. He wondered what had happened, and he decided to look for her. He searched the area, but he couldn't find her. Then, he noticed a figure in the distance. It was his colleague, who had just arrived from another lookout tower.

He felt relieved to see someone, and he told his colleague about the cat. They searched together, but they couldn't find her. Then, they decided to go back to their tower and continue their work.

nothing wrong with your eyes, Stalker. So he'll go, looking forward to company and talk.

No company. When he reached the little hut, he was empty. He had been empty a long time. The natives on the coastline were bunched into inactivity. The floor was covered with last season's dead leaves.

He was sleeping when he saw the cat keeping up towards him. His first thought was that he was seeing things.

He had no feelings about it, one way or another. But he was aware of the monotony.

Company. When the cat passed, his heart leaped. He took a beef sandwich from his pocket, and held it out to extend it. She took it, though he called for it as easily as gently as he could. He thought that she couldn't possibly have a sandwich as a reward for living properly. He ate up the sandwich and dropped the piece on the ground, and went back inside, watching her from the lookout tower's hide. He went back with satisfaction as she sat by the sandwich, then turned his attention back to the sea.

Next thing he knew, she was up in the sandbag beside him, purring softly, rubbing her small body against the hand that held the binoculars. He laughed at his sudden success. He gave her another sandwich. That, wasn't bad.
Yosemite is a National Park that is located in California in the USA. Over 3.7 million people visit each year and explore the seven square miles of Yosemite Valley. Here is an extract from the Yosemite Guidebook.

Your Full Moon Tour

If you are lucky enough to be in the area during full moon, do not miss the chance to see Yosemite Valley in its most beautiful light. Moonbeams wash the cliff faces white, creating a completely otherworldly atmosphere, and it is possible to hike around without need of a torch.

The best place to begin your evening tour, at least in summer, is at Glacier Point (A). You should aim to arrive about half an hour before sunset – or even earlier in summer, when park rangers give special presentations. From this awesome viewpoint you will be able to watch the moon rise through the pink haze that descends over the mountains after sunset, and gradually begin to cast its light into the valley. Maybe you’ll want to sit there all night. But there’s more to come.

The next move is to drive back down into Yosemite Valley, stopping off at the Wawona Tunnel (B) viewpoint on the way. By now the moon should be working its magic on the face of the earth and you’ll be able to see the silhouette of the mountains in the distance. Press on towards Yosemite Village (1), stopping off whenever the fancy takes you to marvel at the serene valley views. Some of the best are: El Capitan (2), Yosemite Falls (3) from Swinging Bridge (4) (if the water is calm enough you may be able to see the falls reflected in the river) and from Sentinel Bridge (5).

If you’re here from April to June, you stand a good chance of witnessing a phenomenon that as far as we know is unique to Yosemite. All you need to do is walk to the base of Lower Yosemite Falls (C). Being perfectly situated to catch the moonlight early in the evening, during these times of high water, the spray and light combine to create ethereal, pure white "moonbows", which arc gracefully across Yosemite Creek (6). You won’t believe it until you see it, but once you’ve seen it you’ll never forget it!
